

JUL 28 1975

Nos. 74-1589 and 74-1590

MICHAEL RODAK, JR., CLERK

IN THE
Supreme Court of the United States
OCTOBER TERM, 1974

GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY,

Petitioner,

MARTHA V. GILBERT, INTERNATIONAL UNION OF
ELECTRICAL, RADIO AND MACHINE WORKERS,
AFL-CIO-CLC, et al.

MARTHA V. GILBERT, INTERNATIONAL UNION OF
ELECTRICAL, RADIO AND MACHINE WORKERS,
AFL-CIO-CLC, et al.,

Petitioners,

GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY

SUPPLEMENTAL BRIEF OF ALL PARTIES TO
JOINT PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI
TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT

THEOPHIL C. KAMMHLZ
STANLEY R. STRAUSS
1750 Pennsylvania Ave., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006

JOHN S. BATTLE, JR.
J. ROBERT BRAME, III
1400 Ross Building
Richmond, Virginia 23219

Attorneys for
General Electric Company,
Petitioner

WINN NEWMAN
RUTH WEYAND
1126 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20036

SEYMOUR DUBOW
5205 Leesburg Pike
Fairfax, Virginia 22041

Attorneys for
Martha V. Gilbert,
International Union of
Electrical, Radio and Machine
Workers, AFL-CIO-CLC, et al.,
Petitioners

IN THE
Supreme Court of the United States
OCTOBER TERM, 1974

---

Nos. 74-1589 and 74-1590

---

GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY,
v. Petitioner,

MARTHA V. GILBERT, INTERNATIONAL UNION OF
ELECTRICAL, RADIO AND MACHINE WORKERS,
AFL-CIO-CLC, et al.

---

MARTHA V. GILBERT, INTERNATIONAL UNION OF
ELECTRICAL, RADIO AND MACHINE WORKERS,
AFL-CIO-CLC, et al.,
v. Petitioners,

GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY

---

SUPPLEMENTAL BRIEF OF ALL PARTIES TO
JOINT PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI
TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT

---

On June 17, 1975, all parties to the suit in the court below filed a joint petition under Rule 20 of the Rules of this Court, praying that a writ of certiorari issue in advance of the judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit to review this case which was then pending in the latter court. In the petition, it was pointed out, inter alia, that the case presented the same question as is now before the Court in Wetzel v. Liberty Mutual Insurance Co., No. 74-1245, certiorari granted May 27, 1975, and that the court of appeals had, on June 9, 1975, entered an order announcing that its decision in the case would be delayed pending this Court's decision in the Wetzel case. The purpose of this supplemental brief, filed pursuant to paragraph 5 of Rule 24 and in which all parties to the suit in the court below again join, is to bring to the Court's attention the action taken by the court of appeals after the joint petition for certiorari had been filed.

On June 27, 1975, the court of appeals issued an opinion (App. F, infra, pp. 1a-14a) and its judgment (App. G, infra, pp. 15a-16a) in this case.<sup>2</sup> In its decision, the court of appeals (Chief Judge Haynsworth and Judge Russell; Judge Widener dissenting) affirmed the district court's decision that petitioner GE's failure to pay sickness and accident benefits for pregnancy-related disabilities violated Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

The fact that the court of appeals has now issued a judgment (App. G, infra, pp. 15a-16a) in the case precludes the applicability of Rule 20, but does not render the petition for certiorari herein either moot or less viable. As set forth in the petition, we believe that the completeness of the record in this case could be of great assistance to the Court in deciding a question as important as that presented in Wetzel, and for this reason petitioner GE and petitioners Gilbert, et al., adhere to their view, and their request, that certiorari be granted. Additionally, we also urge that certiorari be granted in view of the lack of unanimity in the court below.<sup>3</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> Appendices A through E appear in the joint petition for certiorari herein.

<sup>2</sup> The court of appeals has not announced why it departed from its previous announcement that its decision would be delayed pending this Court's decision in Wetzel v. Liberty Mutual Insurance Co., supra.

Respectfully submitted,

THEOPHIL C. KAMMHLZ
STANLEY R. STRAUSS
1750 Pennsylvania Ave., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006

JOHN S. BATTLE, JR.
J. ROBERT BRAME, III
1400 Ross Building
Richmond, Virginia 23219

*Attorneys for
General Electric Company,
Petitioner*

WINN NEWMAN
RUTH WEYAND
1126 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20036

SEYMOUR DUBOW
5205 Leesburg Pike
Fairfax, Virginia 22041

*Attorneys for
Martha V. Gilbert,
International Union of
Electrical, Radio and Machine
Workers, AFL-CIO-CLC, et al.,
Petitioners*

July 28, 1975

---

<sup>3</sup> Petitioners respectfully request that if certiorari is granted, this case be scheduled for oral argument sequentially with the oral argument in the Wetzel case. As stated previously, the parties are prepared to follow whatever reasonably accelerated briefing schedule the Court may deem appropriate.

APPENDIX

APPENDIX F

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT

No. 74-1557

MARTHA V. GILBERT, SHARON E. GODFREY, BARBARA HALL,
ALBERTA B. SMITH, JOHNNIE TAYLOR, DORIS B. WILEY,
MARY R. WILLIAMS, INTERNATIONAL UNION OF ELECTRI-CAL, RADIO AND MACHINE WORKERS, INTERNATIONAL UNION OF ELECTRICAL, RADIO AND MACHINE WORKERS, LOCAL 161, Appellees,

v.

GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY, Appellant.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, at Richmond. Robert R.
Merhige, Jr., District Judge.

Argued: January 8, 1975.

Decided: June 27, 1975

Before HAYNSWORTH, Chief Judge, RUSSELL and WIDENER, Circuit Judges.

RUSSELL, Circuit Judge:

This is a class action by certain women employees of the defendant to secure affirmative injunctive relief under Section 2000e-5(f) (3), 42 U.S.C., that childbirth disabilities of women employees of the defendant are compensable under the defendant's employee disability plan which is applicable generally throughout all defendant's plants. Following the disposition of certain procedural motions relating to venue<sup>1</sup> and the propriety of class representation,<sup>2</sup> the District Court proceeded to the merits of the controversy and, in granting relief, held the denial of pregnancy-related disability benefits violative of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended.<sup>3</sup> The defendant has appealed, asserting that the exclusion of such disabilities under its employee disability plan is not violative of Title VII and that, in any event, the District Court improperly permitted the action to be maintained as a class action. We affirm.

The legislative purpose behind Title VII was to protect employees from any form of disparate treatment because of race, color, religion, sex or national origin or, as one commentator has stated it, "to make employment decisions sex-blind, as well as colorblind."<sup>4</sup> And that remedial purpose is plainly spelt out in the Act, whose sweep "extends beyond discrimination in rates of wages," and which proscribes broadly any adverse discrimination by an employer with respect to "compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment" on the basis of sex.<sup>5</sup> "[T]erms [or] conditions, * * * of employment," as used in the Act, include "fringe benefits" such as pension rights and retirement and disability benefits, all of which are now well recognized as "integrally related to the entire wage

<sup>1</sup> See Gilbert v. General Electric Company, 347 F. Supp. 1058 (1972).

<sup>2</sup> See Gilbert v. General Electric Company, 59 F.R.D. 267 (1973).

<sup>3</sup> See Gilbert v. General Electric Company, 375 F. Supp. 367 (1974).

<sup>4</sup> Note, Developments-Title VII, 84 Harv. L. Rev. 1109, 1175; Sprogis v. United Air Lines, Inc. (7th Cir. 1971) 444 F.2d 1194, 1198, cert. denied 404 U.S. 991.

<sup>5</sup> Bernstein & Williams, Title VII and the Problem of Sex Classifications in Pension Programs, 74 Colum. L. Rev. 1203, 1214-5 (1974).

structure."<sup>6</sup> The Equal Employment Opportunities Commission has so declared in its guidelines<sup>7</sup> issued under the Act. Nor is the defendant in any position to contend that "fringe benefits" are not included in "conditions of employment," for it has stated in its 1966 Annual Report:

"Compensation at General Electric is interpreted broadly to include not only monetary returns but also the value of benefit programs."

It would seem necessarily to follow, therefore, that any limitations or restrictions on disability benefits imposed by the defendant under its program of employee benefits which may be found to be sex-based would represent a discrimination in the "compensation, terms, conditions, or <sup>6</sup> Ibid., p. 1214; Rosen v. Public Service Electric and Gas Company (3d Cir. 1973) 477 F.2d 90, 95; Inland Steel Co. v. National Labor Relations Board (7th Cir. 1948) 170 F.2d 247, 251, affirmed 339 U.S. 382.

<sup>7</sup> "(a) 'Fringe benefits,' as used herein includes medical, hospital, accident, life insurance and retirement benefits; profit-sharing and bonus plans; leave; and other terms, conditions, and privileges of employment.

"(b) It shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employer to discriminate between men and women with regard to fringe benefits." 29 C.F.R. § 1604.9.

* * *

"(b) Disabilities caused or contributed to by pregnancy, abortion, childbirth, and recovery therefrom are, for all job-related purposes, temporary disabilities and should be treated as such under any health or temporary disability insurance or sick leave plan available in connection with employment. Written and unwritten employment policies and practices involving matters such as the commencement and duration of leave, the availability of extensions, the accrual of seniority and other benefits and privileges, reinstatement, and payment under any health or temporary disability insurance or sick leave plan, formal or informal, shall be applied to disability due to pregnancy or childbirth on the same terms and conditions as they are applied to other temporary disabilities." 29 C.F.R. § 1604.10(b).

privileges of employment" within the proscription of the Act.

Pregnancy-related disabilities are, however, excluded from the disability benefits available under the defendant's employee benefit program. It is specifically this restriction upon the benefits available under the program which has prompted this controversy and which the plaintiffs seek by their action to invalidate. Pregnancy is a condition unique to women and a basic characteristic of their sex. A disability program which, while granting disability benefits generally, denies such benefits expressly for disability arising out of pregnancy, a disability possible only among women, is manifestly one which can result in a less comprehensive program of employee compensation and benefits for women employees than for men employees; and would do so on the basis of sex. "[W]omen, to be treated without discrimination [under the Act], must be permitted to be women," and this means a right to be "women" without being burdened by any discrimination in employment benefits, whether in wages or in fringe benefits, on account of characteristics peculiar to their sex.<sup>8</sup> It is of no moment that an employer may not have deliberately intended sex-related discrimination; the statute looks to "consequences," not intent.<sup>9</sup> Any discrimination, such as that here, which is "inextricably sex-linked" in consequences and result, is violative of the Act.<sup>10</sup> In so concluding, we are following the opinion reached by most of the Courts which have considered the issue<sup>11</sup> and are giving effect to the

<sup>8</sup> Note, 1968 Duke L. Journal 671, 721-2.

<sup>9</sup> Griggs v. Duke Power Co. (1971) 401 U.S. 424, 432.

<sup>10</sup> Note, Developments-Title VII, 84 Harv. L. Rev. 1109, 1175.

<sup>11</sup> Communication Workers of America v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co. (2d Cir. 1974) — F.2d —; Wetzel v. Liberty Mutual Insurance Co., (3d Cir. 1975) — F.2d —; 43 L.W. 2352, decided February 12, 1975; Holthaus v. Compton & Sons (8th Cir. 1975) — F.2d —, — L.W. —, filed April 10, 1975; Farkas v. South

construction of the Act as adopted by the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission in its guidelines, to which the courts are directed to give "great deference" in applying the Act.<sup>12</sup>

The defendant insists, however, that this pregnancy related disability exclusion provision in its plan cannot be deemed discriminatory since its plan only offers benefits

Western City School District (6th Cir. 1974) — F.2d —; Vineyard v. Hollister School District (D.C. Cal. 1974) — F. Supp. —, 8 FEP Cases 1009; Satty v. Nashville Gas Co. (D.C. Tenn. 1974) — F. Supp. —; contra Newmon v. Delta Air Lines, Inc. (D.C. Ga. 1973) 374 F. Supp. 238, affirmed 475 F.2d 768.

<sup>12</sup> The guidelines issued by the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission, which by law is charged with enforcement of Title VII and whose guidelines are said to be entitled to "great deference" in the construction of the Act, Phillips v. Martin Marietta Corp. (1971) 400 U.S. 542, 545; Griggs v. Duke Power Co., supra (401 U.S. p. 434), state specifically that "pregnancy benefits" are within the protection of the Act.

It may be, as the defendant strenuously argues, that the Commission had earlier indicated an opinion contrary to that presently reflected in its guidelines. The defendant urges that this waffling by the Commission renders the present guidelines poor guides to a construction of the Act and that we should look to the earlier opinions of the Commission for guidance—or, at least, should give minimal weight to the Commission's guidelines. This argument was pressed on the Court in Wetzel v. Liberty Mutual Insurance Co., supra, and was effectively answered, in our opinion, by the decision of the Court in that case. It has, also, been suggested in a Note, Current Trends in Pregnancy Benefits—1972 EEOC Guidelines Interpreted, 24 DePaul L. Rev. 127, that the guidelines were improperly issued and are invalid. All of this, however, is beside the point as we see it. We are of the opinion, as was the District Court, that the guidelines, as presently promulgated, are merely expressive of what is the obvious meaning and purpose of the Act. We entertain no doubt that it was the legislative purpose in enacting Title VII to prohibit any disparity of treatment in compensation and conditions of employment between men and women and this included any disparity that might be sex-related in fringe benefits. And this would be our opinion, whatever might be the language of the Commission's guidelines.

during sickness and pregnancy confinement cannot be regarded as a sickness. Its basis for arguing that pregnancy confinement is not a sickness is that such disability is "voluntary." The plan, by its provisions, covers disabilities resulting from non-occupational sickness and accident. It incorporates no definition of either "disability" or "sickness," though it does state that "non-occupational" means "any sickness or injury not arising out of or in the course of employment and not entitling you or a covered dependent to benefits under any Workmen's Compensation or Occupational Disease Act." While a number of decisions, relying on this idea of voluntarism, has, particularly in the construction of insurance contracts, refused to characterize childbirth as a sickness,<sup>13</sup> the rule generally followed in labor arbitration cases is to equate pregnancy disability and sickness and to find an employee entitled to the same disability benefits in pregnancy confinement as in the case of any other disability under an employee sickness benefit program. See Middleton Board of Education, 56 LA 830 (1971); National Lead Co., 18 LA 528 (1952); Republic Steel Corp., 37 LA 367 (1961).<sup>14</sup> Under the circumstances, it would seem that whether pregnancy disability was within the coverage offered by the plan would be an issue that would turn largely on the construction of the plan as followed by the defendant itself. The record appears clear that, other than for childbirth disability, the defendant had never construed its plan as eliminating all so-called "voluntary" disabilities. It has, as the District Court stated, applied its plan to "all disability, including cosmetic surgery, disabilities arising from attempted suicides, etc." except those occurring during childbirth.<sup>15</sup> In short, the defendant raises this defense of "voluntarism" only against a disability that is unique to women and disregards it in connection with any claim for disability submitted by male employees. Whatever facile plausibility there might be to the argument that its plan does not cover "voluntary" disabilities accordingly disappears in the face of the manner in which the defendant itself has construed and applied its plan.

<sup>13</sup> Mutual Benefit Health & Acc. Ass'n. v. United Cas. Co. (1st Cir. 1944) 142 F.2d 390, 394, cert. denied 323 U.S. 729; Price v. State Capital Life Insurance Company (1964) 261 N.C. 152, 134 S.E. 2d 171, 173.

<sup>14</sup> See, also, Wetzel, supra, where the Court, in dismissing a similar claim made in a case like the present one, pointed out that disabilities resulting from voluntary acts, i.e., done with full knowledge of potential disability, cover a wide range, as the Court observed, since "[d]rinking intoxicating beverages, smoking, skiing, handball and tennis are all types of activities in which we could sustain harm."

The main thrust of the defendant's argument in this Court, however, is that the recent decision in Geduldig v. Aiello (1974) 417 U.S. 484, authoritatively determined that, contrary to the conclusion of the District Court below and the guidelines of the Commission, disparity in treatment between pregnancy-related and other disabilities cannot be classified as sex discrimination prohibited under either the Equal Protection Clause or Title VII. We do not read Aiello as so holding as applied to an action under Title VII. Nor has it been so read in the two recent Circuit decisions, which have faced directly this problem.<sup>16</sup> Aiello dealt with a constitutional attack under the Equal Protection Clause on a legislatively created social welfare program for private employees in which a differentiation between pregnancy-related and other disabilities was made. In that context the Court applied the customary standards in testing legislation under the Equal Protection Clause and held that, "[A]bsent a showing that distinctions involving pregnancy are mere pretexts designed to effect an invidious discrimination against the members of one sex or the other, lawmakers are constitutionally free [under the Fourteenth Amendment] to include or exclude pregnancy from the coverage of legislation such as this on any reasonable basis * * *.”<sup>17</sup> (Italics added) In line

<sup>15</sup> 375 F. Supp., p. 381.

<sup>16</sup> Communication Workers of America v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., supra; Wetzel v. Liberty Mutual Insurance Co., supra. Although Aiello is not discussed in Holthaus v. Compton & Sons, supra, its inapplicability to a Title VII case is implicit in the Court's decision.

<sup>17</sup> Note 20 at p. 496.

The point of difference in the majority and dissenting opinions in Aiello was in identifying the standard to be used in testing the “gender-based” classifications—whether it should be the test of “rationally supportable,” as adopted by the majority opinion, or what has been described as the “two-tier” test of “strict scrutiny” and “compelling necessity,” as urged in the dissenting opinion, a test which, as Chief Justice Burger in Dunn v. Blumstein (1972) 405 U.S. 330, at pp. 363-4, observed in his dissenting opinion, “no state law has ever satisfied * * *.” We concluded in Eslinger v. Thomas (4th Cir. 1973) 476 F.2d 225, 230-1, that the proper equal protection test, in cases of sex discrimination, was whether the classification had “a ‘fair and substantial’ relation between the basis of the classification and the object of the classification.” Kahn v. Shevin (1974), 416 U.S. 351, decided just two months before Aiello, employed this test in passing on an equal protection claim dealing with sex discrimination. The Court did make some reference in that case to the fact that the statute under review was a tax statute but such comment has been characterized as “a smoke-screen.” Note, Kahn v. Shevin and the “Heightened Rationality Test”: Is the Supreme Court Promoting a Double Standard in Sex Discrimination Cases? 32 Wash. & Lee L. Rev. 275, 288. In Weinberger v. Wiesenfeld (1975) — U.S. —, — L.W. —, Justice Brennan, who had dissented in both Aiello and Kahn on the ground that the “two-tier” standard of “strict scrutiny” and “compelling necessity” applied in sex-related cases under the Equal Protection Clause, apparently recognized that the standard adopted by the majority in Aiello and Kahn and accepted by us earlier in Eslinger, had been established and, in his opinion for an unanimous Court, he found the statutory classification invalid because it was “entirely irrational.” For a discussion of this question, see Note 32 Wash. & Lee L. Rev. 275; Gunther, In Search of Evolving Doctrine on a Changing Court: A Model for a Newer Equal Protection, 86 Harv. L. Rev. 1 (1972); Bartlett, Pregnancy and the Constitution: The Uniqueness Trap, 62 Cal. L. Rev. 1532, at pp. 1538-40 (1974); Note, Geduldig v. Aiello, 75 Col. L. Rev. 441 (1975); Note, Kahn v. Shevin—Sex: A Less-Than-Suspect Classification, 36 U. Pitt L. Rev. 584 (1974); Note, Geduldig v. Aiello, 52 J. of Urban L. 591 (1974).

with this, it added in note 20<sup>18</sup> of the opinion, that not “every legislative classification concerning pregnancy is a sex-based classification like those considered in Reed, supra,<sup>19</sup> and Frontiero, supra.<sup>20</sup> In essence, its holding was simply that a legislative classification incorporating a pregnancy-childbirth classification was “rationally supportable” in a social welfare program under the Fourteenth Amendment and that it did not amount to an “invidious discrimination” under the Equal Protection Clause. And this was all that was required to sustain the legislation against an Equal Protection assault. It should be noted, perhaps parenthetically, that the opinion in Aiello did not declare that the distinction in disability benefit rights in that case between males and females, a distinction which excluded pregnancy-related disabilities, was not discriminatory. In fact, the language of the Court indicates rather clearly that the Court considered the differentiation discriminatory. What it concluded was, as we have said, that such discrimination was not “invidious” and was not without a rational relationship to the objective of the legislature in establishing the social welfare program under review.

In this case, on the contrary, the issue is not whether the exclusion of pregnancy benefits under a social welfare program is “rationally supportable” or “invidious” but whether Title VII, the Congressional statute, in language and intent, prohibits such exclusion. Accordingly, as the Court in Wetzel v. Liberty Mutual Insurance Co., supra, aptly observed, “our case is one of statutory interpretation rather than one of constitutional analysis.” There is a well-recognized difference of approach in applying constitutional standards under the Equal Protection Clause as in Aiello and in the statutory construction of the “sex-blind" mandate of Title VII. To satisfy constitutional Equal Protection standards, a discrimination need only be "rationally supportable" and that was the situation in Aiello, as well as in Reed and Frontiero. The test in those cases was legislative reasonableness. Title VII, however, authorizes no such "rationality" test in determining the propriety of its application. It represents a flat and absolute prohibition against all sex discrimination in conditions of employment.<sup>21</sup> It is not concerned with whether the discrimination is "invidious" or not. It outlaws all sex discrimination in the conditions of employment. It authorizes but a single exception to this statutory command of non-discrimination and that is a narrow one<sup>22</sup> which, to be upheld, requires a finding that it is "necessary to the safe and efficient operation of the business." Robinson v. Lorillard Corporation (4th Cir. 1971) 444 F.2d 791, 798, cert. dis. 404 U.S. 1006. The defendant makes no claim for relief under this exception.<sup>23</sup> Its denial of pregnancy-

<sup>18</sup> At p. 496.

<sup>19</sup> Reed v. Reed (1971) 404 U.S. 71.

<sup>20</sup> Frontiero v. Richardson (1973) 411 U.S. 677.

<sup>21</sup> 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2.

<sup>22</sup> The EEOC guidelines provide that "the bona fide occupational qualification exception as to sex should be interpreted narrowly." 29 C.F.R. § 1604.2(a) (1972). The guidelines specifically reject the following as justifiable discrimination under the "bona fide occupational qualification" rubric: refusal to hire a woman based on assumptions about the "comparative employment characteristics of women in general" (for example, the assumption that women's turnover rates are higher than those of men); refusal to hire an individual based on sexual stereotypes; refusal to hire because of client or co-worker preferences. Id. § 1604.2(a)(1)(i)-(iii). The only situation in which the Commission will allow sex as a bona fide qualification is "where it is necessary for the purpose of authenticity or genuineness" (for example, a female role in a motion picture). Id. § 1064.2(a)(2). * * * This construction accords with our own decision in Robinson.

<sup>23</sup> While the defendant disclaimed consistently any intention of asserting a business necessity defense under Section 703(e) of the Act, it did offer considerable evidence on the "business considerations" which prompted its exclusion of childbirth disability in its employee benefit plan. It regarded this evidence as "material", to related disability from the application of its employee disability benefit program, in our opinion, falls clearly within the prohibitions of Title VII and Aiello confers no immunity for such denial. The District Court properly so held.

We find equally without merit the contention of the defendant that this class action falls within subsection (b) (3) of Rule 23, compelling compliance with the requirement of personal notice as held in Eisen.<sup>24</sup> This is not a (b)(3) action; it is an action in equity for injunctive relief and falls within the mold of subsection (b)(2), as the District Court properly ruled. The notice requirements imposed by the District Court were adequate for an action under subsection (b)(2). Robinson v. Lorillard Corp., supra; Note, 39 F.R.D. 69 at 102.

The judgment appealed from is accordingly affirmed.

AFFIRMED.<sup>25</sup>

quote its own brief, "not because of a Section 703(e) reason, but rather because it shows the absence of pretextual motivation under the Geduldig, supra, rationale." [p. 12, Reply Brief] Since we do not consider Geduldig in point here, it is unnecessary to consider this evidence. It might be noted, though, that these same "business considerations" were marshalled in opposition to the enactment of the Equal Rights Law one year before the enactment of Title VII and were discarded by the Congress. See U.S. Code Congr. & Admn. News, 88th Congr., 1st Sess., 1963, p. 687 and 689. Since the two Acts (i.e., the Equal Pay Law and Title VII as directed at sex discrimination) had a similar purpose, Congress no more regarded "business considerations," that is claimed greater absenteeism by women employees, etc., as a basis for escape from the prohibitions of Title VII than it did for the Equal Pay Law. See, Note, 84 Harv. L. Rev. supra, at p. 1174. As to whether there is any basis in fact for those claims of "business considerations", see Bartlett, supra, at pp. 1158-9.

<sup>24</sup> Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacqueline (1974) 417 U.S. 156.

<sup>25</sup> Since the Supreme Court has granted certiorari in Wetzel v. Liberty Mutual Insurance Co., supra, see 43 LW 3624 (U.S. May 27, 1975), the District Court should perhaps defer further proceedings herein until after Wetzel is decided.

WIDENER, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

I respectfully dissent from the majority opinion that the exclusion of pregnancy related disability from the application of an employee disability benefits program is prohibited by Title VII, 42 USC § 2000e, et seq.

I think such a holding is precluded by the decision of the Supreme Court in Geduldig v. Aiello, 417 US 484 (1974). Although that case involved an action brought under the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment and not Title VII, the decision should control here.

42 USC § 2000e-2 provides in part that it shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employer to discriminate against an individual because of the individual's sex. The inquiry in this case must therefore focus initially on whether the exclusion of pregnancy related disability from the disability benefits plan is sex discrimination. If it is not sex discrimination, then, regardless of what test is applied, there is no Title VII violation.

The court, in Geduldig, held that the exclusion of pregnancy from a state disability insurance plan for employees of private employers was not a classification that would support a finding of sex discrimination, since it was not shown that distinctions involving pregnancy were mere pretexts designed to effect an invidious discrimination against one sex. 417 US at 496-97, n. 20. Such a showing was not made here.

The Court said of the California insurance plan, "There is no evidence in the record that the selection of the risks insured by the program worked to discriminate against any definable group or class in terms of the aggregate risk protection derived by that group or class from the program. There is no risk from which men are protected and women are not. Likewise, there is no risk from which women are protected and men are not." Geduldig, 417 US at 496-97. In a footnote, 417 US at 496, n.20, in reply to the dissenting opinion, the Court explained that the pregnancy exclusion is a "far cry from cases like Reed . . . and Frontiero . . . involving discrimination based upon gender as such," and most importantly continued: "The California insurance program does not exclude anyone from benefit eligibility because of gender, but merely removes one physical condition—pregnancy—from the list of compensable disabilities." 417 US, n.20, p. 496. And later in the same footnote appears the flat statement which should control our case: "The lack of identity between the excluded disability and gender as such under this insurance program becomes clear upon the most cursory analysis." 417 US, n. 20, p. 497.

Absent a showing of sex discrimination, Title VII, even if its reach were broader than the equal protection clause, would not render unlawful a pregnancy exclusion such as that involved here. Since the Supreme Court has held, for precisely the same exclusion, there is a "lack of identity between the excluded disability and gender as such," the exclusion should no more support a finding of discrimination under Title VII than under the equal protection clause. And since, as the Court says, the exclusion is "merely" the removal of "one physical condition—pregnancy—from the list of compensable disabilities," no reason appears why a collective bargaining agreement may not lawfully do by contract what a state may do by legislation.

But, in this circuit, the reach of Title VII is not broader than that of the Fourteenth Amendment. We have held that "the test of validity under Title VII is not different from the test of validity under the fourteenth amendment." United States v. Chesterfield County School Dist., S.C., 484 F2d 70, 73 (4th Cir. 1973).<sup>1</sup> Unless this court intends to alter its position as just above stated, it is required to reverse the decision below because of the decision of the Supreme Court in Geduldig. If the test is "not different," there can be no justification for the finding of discrimination here.

<sup>1</sup> Indeed, the very opinion of the district court affirmed here indiscriminately cites equal protection and Title VII cases in support of its position. That the rule in this circuit as recited from the Chesterfield County case is a widespread practice is pointed out in a comment in 75 Col. Law Review, 441, 464, 467 (1975).

Additional reasons for my disagreement are the illogical results bound to follow. For example: a state's disability benefit plan for its own employees covered by Title VII, 42 USC § 2000e(b), would, under our holding, not be allowed to exclude pregnancy from its coverage. However, such an exclusion could be made freely in a state plan for employees of private employers such as that in Geduldig. I fail to see the justification for the inconsistency.

I grant the majority opinion is most persuasively written. Nevertheless, after many readings, I am left with the impression that, read as a whole, it very nearly follows the rationale of the dissenting justices in Geduldig which has been rejected by a majority of the court as emphasized in footnote 20 above referred to.

In sum, I am of opinion Geduldig was written with an eye to Title VII cases certain to come, not in a vacuum and not with self imposed blinders, and came to the only result logically possible when we consider that the Court must be the even handed arbiter in all cases, not only those involving equal protection. I even assume that the result in Geduldig may not be as socially desirable as the minority there argues for, and the majority here obtains. But social desirability is not the aim. The aim is to construe the statute in view of applicable precedent and legislative purpose. And Title VII seeks to equalize opportunity, not create an advantage for either men or women. If Congress wishes to legislate in favor of pregnant women, I see no constitutional impediment,<sup>2</sup> legislatures have made less rational classifications for centuries. But, I submit, Congress did not so undertake in Title VII.

<sup>2</sup> See Schlesinger v. Ballard, — US — 43 L.W. 4158 (1975), and Kahn v. Shevin, 416 US 351 (1974).

APPENDIX G

[Filed June 27, 1975, WILLIAM K. SLATE, II, Clerk]

Judgment

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT

No. 74-1557

MARTHA V. GILBERT, SHARON E. GODFREY, BARBARA HALL,
ALBERTA B. SMITH, JOHNNIE TAYLOR, DORIS B. WILEY,
MARY R. WILLIAMS, INTERNATIONAL UNION OF ELECTRICAL,
RADIO AND MACHINE WORKERS, INTERNATIONAL UNION
OF ELECTRICAL, RADIO AND MACHINE WORKERS,
LOCAL 161,

Appellees,

ACLU AND EQUAL RIGHTS ADVOCATES,

Amicus Curiae,

WOMEN'S EQUITY ACTION LEAGUE; NATIONAL ORG. FOR WOMEN AND HUMAN RIGHTS FOR WOMEN, INC.,

Amicus Curiae,

UNITED STATES EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY COMMISSION,

Amicus Curiae,

BELLAMY, BLANK, GOODMAN, KELLY, ROSS AND STANLEY,

Amicus Curiae,

versus

GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY,

Appellant,

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,

Amicus Curiae.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia.

This cause came on to be heard on the record from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, and was argued by counsel.

On consideration whereof, It is now here ordered and adjudged by this Court that the judgment of the said District Court appealed from, in this cause, be, and the same is hereby, affirmed.

WILLIAM K. SLATE, II
Clerk